HOW TO RATE

SELF-ASSESSMENT

Consider performance across the core responsibilities of your role and relative to the expectations of your level. Reflect on quality, timeliness, reliability, and consistency across the full assessment period. Use examples that represent your overall performance rather than a single project or event.

If you lead people, reflect more than your own output. Consider how well you built a collaborative, inclusive, high-performing team through talent development, performance management, engagement, retention, and results.

MANAGER

MANAGER VERSION

Reflecting on this employee's role and goals for this period, what did they deliver against what was planned? Please reference specific metrics or outcomes where applicable.

HOW TO RATE

SELF-ASSESSMENT

Evaluate achievement against your individual goals and priorities that remained current and relevant during the assessment period. Goals that were formally deprioritized, modified, or replaced because of a change in business direction or resource availability should not be treated as shortfalls. Consider the quality of the results delivered, progress against approved stretch goals, and circumstances reasonably outside your control.

If you joined Deltek or moved into your role during the year, evaluate your achievements based on your time in role rather than the full review period. Focus on your progress against set goals or milestones — the quality of your ramp-up, early progress relative to what's expected to date, and what you accomplished given the time and opportunities available to you.

A rating of 3 indicates successful, consistent performance and is a positive assessment. Ratings of 4 or 5 should reflect sustained performance beyond established expectations, supported by specific examples. While the overall rating does not need to be an exact average of the other assessment question ratings, the overall rating should generally align and be consistent with the ratings already assigned.
